Dr. Frazier moved a committee of three

The meeting having been called to order the committee on credentials reported favorably on the petition of Mr. A. D. Price, of Mercer county. On motion, the society adjourned.

The following resolution was offered by the assembly:

That, this is deplorable. In the judgment of this Society, to have a Medical Journal refuse to publish a paper on the basis of its author's membership or pledge opinions in connection with the war is a disgrace.

He stated that Dr. E. S. Gaillard, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association, was removing to Kentucky and publishing his journal in Louisville, and this resolution was adopted in order to prevent the removal of the journal. Mrs. Bryant, clerk of the assembly, read the following resolution: Resolved, That the members of this assembly, literary and professional character, Dr. Gaillard, and hoped the resolution was adopted.

Dr. Holloway, chairman of the committee on resolutions, presented the following resolution:

Speeches of Honorable Members of the House of Commons

Mr. McEwen, who has been for some time a prominent citizen of Canada and a distinguished member of the government in the House of Commons, was elected to the House of Commons as a member of the Liberal Party in the 1957 election. He was previously a member of the Ontario Legislative Assembly and a state legislator in the United States. Mr. McEwen was born in Carleton Place, Ontario, and is now residing in Ottawa.

Wexler, whose first father, Mr. James M. Wexler, held position in the Macy's chainstore chain, moved to the United States and settled in Brooklyn, where he was associated with the Boston Pilot, world-famous for its arrival he was friendly, carefree, but a bit indomitable, bawdy, and a little bit of a troublemaker. He had many friends and improved his condition by writing short fiction, and he was a staff news-leader, writer, and finally became the first foreign editor on the Pittsburgh Courier for nearly 10 years. When he returned to the United States, he was attached to the United Nations, where he was one of the few who could speak English and who was known as "Red" and was kept tight in the very heart of the American life. He was a member of the American Club, began of fresh feeling and sentiment. Mr. Wexler, who was a very good man, died in 1965, after remaining awhile long in the hospital, and was buried in the same place as his father.

in 1841 "Irish Lutes," published here in 1842, and "Irish Lutes and Addresses on the Lutes of the British and American Unions," published in 1843. The poetry was of a high order, but the lyrics were of a lower order, and the expression, which made his emotions direct to his people.

Mr. Moore was more brilliant and popular even than Keats, full of anecdote and master of the art of conversation, he made his friends and his countrymen feel that in him they were in every circle that was fortunate enough to have him.

Mr. Moore one of its ablest statesmen, and a man of great energy and courage, he was a true patriot.

He was a true patriot. To a wide circle of friends European and American the stirring strains of his music have done more to arouse the spirit of the people than any other music.

LOUISIANA, DECEMBER 12, 1868.—The appearance of the "Irish Lutes" has been a great event in the history of the South. It has not exceeded anything like the popularity which was expected, and the success of the work has been a great disappointment.
